ADVERTORIAL

2022 – ADVERTORIALS – ANIMATION MAGAZINE

Kenneth Norman | Online Program Director of Animation at The Los Angeles Film School

Can you tell us a little bit about the animation program at L.A. Film School?

The online Animation Bachelor of Science Degree consists of three concentrations focusing on computer-generated imagery departments within the animation industry for film and games. The concentrations are Character Animation, Environment and Character Design, and Visual Effects. The length of the concentrations is 36 months long, but each concentration shares the first 19 months to learn the foundational knowledge along with the production pipeline used in the animation industry. The second half of the degree takes a deeper dive into a particular section of the animation pipeline, allowing students to develop their skill set in an area they want to focus on.

What makes this program stand out from other schools?

A couple of unique things about our online Animation degree are that our staff consists of individuals who have worked in the animation industry for a minimum of 4 years. Our curriculum is designed based on pipelines used in the industry. The way our program is designed is another unique thing about the animation degree. We teach a flipped curriculum at the beginning of the program with an emphasis on the final output. We focus on camera, composition, and render using production assets at the beginning. The goal is to build confidence, give students a stronger expectation of what quality assets should be produced, and demonstrate that they can create a high-quality production asset.

What are some of the most popular classes at the school?

The Story Driven Animation, Crowd Animation, Visual Effects for Games and Film, and Character Creation are among our students' most popular courses in our animation degree program. Students love creating their own personal vision for their characters, visual effects, and to be able to bring to life their own stories in those courses.

What is the best advice you can give those who are applying to the program?

- 1. Your health should always come first.
Trying to learn something new without a healthy lifestyle can significantly impact your concentration and brain. Your body needs food, nourishment, and sleep to absorb things properly.
- 2. The key to learning is to communicate properly and be open-minded.

2022 – ADVERTORIALS – ANIMATION MAGAZINE

Most students come from a standardized learning background where they complete a project, accept the grade, and don't follow up on what they could have done better. They should think of college as more of a mentorship and push to understand the relevance behind what they are learning, and how it aids them in their personal goals.

3. Find an organizational and time management paradigm that works for you.

I would suggest setting a particular time and place to work in your home. Understand you're not perfect, and we all slip up. Learn from it and course correct and rebalance your time.

4. Remember every school event and people you meet is an opportunity.

Surrounding yourself with people who have similar interests will keep your motivation, engagement high and they could be a help to you after graduation.

5. Get to know your instructors and faculty, they are the subject matter experts.

The instructors have worked in the industry and know the reason behind what you're learning. That wisdom will take you further than just having the knowledge of what the tool does.

6. Enjoy and embrace the artistic growth process.

Getting feedback sometimes can be perceived as mentally frustrating or discouraging. Keep your focus and remember feedback is to make you a better artist and get you closer to your goal.

What kind of career placement opportunities do you offer students/graduates?

The Los Angeles Film School has a Career Development department that provides assistance and resources that support students and graduates as they navigate creating and sustaining a successful career. The Career Development Department works in conjunction with students' education curricula to prepare them with interpersonal and professional skills, support their vocational goals, and help to bridge the gap between academia and the workplace.

What is your take on the employment picture for recent graduates?

I believe the job market is good and our growing list of graduates are leaving the school with the skill sets needed to be successful in an entry-level role in their field of study. We start aiding our graduates months before graduation to help them work on the portfolio and the soft skills needed to apply for a job. We are very proud of our graduates and their portfolios and will always support them even after they leave the school.

Honoring the Largest Class of Alumni from The L.A. Film School for Their Contributions to the 74th Primetime Emmy® Awards

The Los Angeles Film School is proud to recognize its alumni's contributions to this year's Emmy-nominated productions. This is the largest group of alumni to work on TV productions across major networks, including last year's breakout hit The White Lotus and this year's thrilling fourth season of Stranger Things. More than 50 alumni from various degree programs worked on 26 different Emmy-nominated productions. A special congratulations to the four alumni who were personally nominated for their work.

Sean Brennan (Film 2006), Supervising Art Director of Stranger Things, nominated for Outstanding Production Design for a Period or Fantasy Program (one hour or more).

Ben Gamble (Film 2002), Camera Operator for Survivor, nominated for Outstanding Cinematography for a Reality Program. Ben has been on Survivor for 10 seasons. This is Ben's fourth Emmy nomination.

Joshua Gitersonke (Film 2007), Director of Photography for The Amazing Race, and nominated for Outstanding Cinematography for a Reality Program. Josh has been on the show's camera crew for 13 years and has received 9 Emmy® nominations during his career. He won an Emmy® award in 2019 for his work on The Late Late Show Carpool Karaoke Primetime Special.

John Valerio (Film 2002), Editor of The White Lotus, nominated for Outstanding Single Camera Picture Editing for a Limited or Anthology Series.

The Los Angeles Film School is proud to support the creative endeavors of its students and alumni as they journey into the entertainment industry. Since 1999, the school is rooted in Hollywood and has expanded its degree offerings online to serve students around the world. Visit lafilm.edu for more info.

Full Length:

What's Animation like at The L.A. Film School?

Whether you study here in Hollywood or online, our program's strength is teaching you the post-production pipeline with diverse degree concentrations. There's the VFX and compositing concentration. This is explosions, fixing mistakes, adding actors to a scene. We call this our problem solving track.

Game Art and Character and Environment Design are our asset-building tracks. Creating CG characters, environments, and props for both film and games.

Animation, the bring things to life track. This is rigging, movement, and dialog syncing.

But 30 seconds isn't long enough to share everything about our animation programs.

If you want more, check them out at lafilm.edu.

Welcome to Audio Prod | SCRIPT

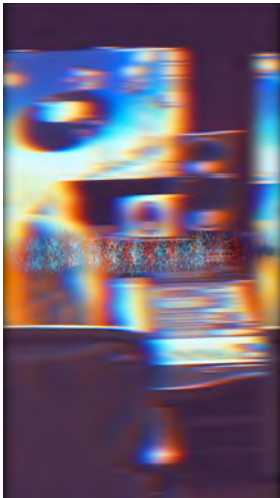

What's up, guys?

My name is Sam Ruff. I'm an instructor here at The L.A. Recording School. We are here at the Ivar Theatre in historic Hollywood.

We do live sound classes here at The L.A. Recording School. But, when you do a degree in Audio Production here, you're also going to take some studio classes, which is what I teach. I teach Advanced Studio Recording and Audio System Technology. So if you're interested in learning a big analog 32-channel console, we've got quite a few of them at LARS for you to check out and learn. So when you go out into the field in the industry, after you graduate, you're going to be all set having a bunch of different consoles under your belt.
