Subject: Explore advanced degrees in Transformative Social Change

Preheader: Learn to contribute to civil society advocacy to make positive change in the world

Body

In today's world of constant economic and governmental uncertainty, it can feel like everyday citizens are left to fend for themselves. Many people desire positive social change but only a few have the necessary skills to effectively channel that desire into actionable leadership. Empowering students to build those skills and impact the world around them is the focus of Saybrook University's programs in Transformative Social Change.

Transformative Social Change Programs

Our Transformative Social Change programs are designed to help students combat global strife and mitigate community suffering by studying the intersectionality of seemingly disparate systems, generational poverty, and how policy is written and enacted in certain communities.

- M.A. in Transformative Social Change
- M.A. in Transformative Social Change, Peace and Justice Studies Specialization
- M.A. in Transformative Social Change, Social Impact Media Specialization
- Ph.D. in Transformative Social Change

Peace and Justice Studies Specialization

Attendees of the 2023 IMPACT National Conference may have interest in Saybrook's Peace and Justice Studies Specialization program. The conference is the largest gathering for those in higher education committed to engaging college students in service, activism, politics, advocacy, and other socially responsible work.

Peace and Justice Studies students examine the theory and history of social change, learning how discrimination, access to food, and myriad other factors pose challenges for underrepresented populations and how bringing that conflict to light can move us all toward a more just global society.
